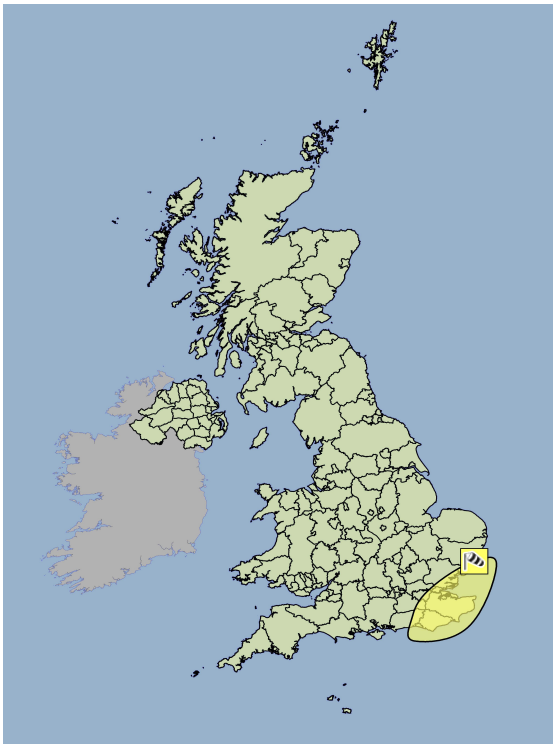
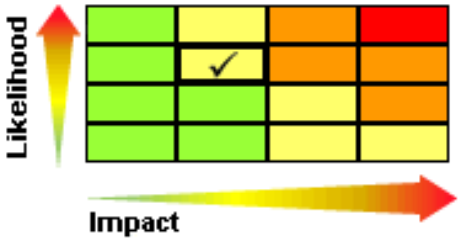
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deepening depression which has been moving southeastwards across England overnight will move away into the near continent this morning. As it does so very strong northerly flow will develop on its western flank and affect southeast England for a time.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 05:00 on Sat, 27th Dec 2014 until 11:00 on Sat, 27th Dec 2014

Gale force northerly winds are expected to develop across southeast England in the early hours of Saturday giving gusts of 50-60 mph quite widely and perhaps as much as 65 mph on exposed coasts of Kent. Winds should gradually ease from the west during the morning.

The public should be aware of the risk of some disruption to travel.
